

GUIDEBOOK

ONLY IN EDINBURGH (2ND EDITION)

Duncan J D Smith

Though travel to Scotland's capital is currently on hold, there's nothing to stop us daydreaming about future visits and this travel guide will tell you lots about the city that you didn't already know. For instance, did you know that it was in Edinburgh that Charles Darwin's professional interest in the natural world was first aroused? Or that a suburban house hides a subterranean mystery that still puzzles to this day?

Author and city explorer Smith reveals some of the lesser-known sites of interest in the capital, which have intrigued him on his explorations through the city, as well as some back stories on famous sites that you may not be familiar with. Just think, when you do make it back, how much more you will know about this fine city.

The Urban Explorer, £16.95

onlyinguides.com